"The battalion are here, gathered together, in marching order, with their paraphernalia of pots, pans, sticks and the dozen and one things which are found useful in the trenches, and more so, in reserve. It was just getting dark, the lads were sitting, some on their packs, the others on the ground talking of different subjects, which at this time interests everybody. Subjects connected to the war and more particularly the "Kaiser" when from nowhere came the beautiful strains of "My Heart is With You Tonight". Crowds immediately gathered round the musician, Sgt Verrall, and before the battalion marched off to the trenches were treated to some very welcome solo's on his cornet. If we could only peep into the future. Four days later I visited battalion headquarters. Outside I saw a body on a stretcher. In reply to my query, "who is it", one of the stretcher bearers replied "Sergeant Verrall". To say he will be missed by the battalion is not saying enough. His cheery manner, bright quips and jests, made him a universal favourite. He is mourned by the whole of the battalion, and their sympathy is extended to the friends and relations at home, who may take consolation in knowing he died the death of a soldier, respected and loved by his comrades."

"Mr Walter Bailey who died last month, (April 1949) just two months short of his 100th birthday, was well-known for his great interest in brass bands. Even after the Lamberhurst Band had broken up he used to walk to Wadhurst to play the trombone. (In 1936, when the Lamberhurst band amalgamated with Wadhurst, he would have been aged 86) He held a medal for being the oldest bandsman in Kent. In his early days Mr Bailey was a champion sheep shearer and later became a gardener"
