

Hassocks Congregational Men's Rally Brass Band

Gavin Holman, 20 March 2023

A Congregational Church was established in the Sussex village of Hassocks in 1896, following an earlier Mission Church on the site. At some point, probably in early 1908, the Church members formed a brass band to provide music for their services and meetings. The Young Men's Rally Brass Band first appeared on Monday 8 June 1908, when it performed during a sports day which had been arranged to raise funds for the band. The band, conducted by Mr Crapps (late instructor of the Brighton Corporation Band), also gave a concert in the schoolroom in the evening. Magnus Volk, a local congregational worshipper, lent a meadow for the use of the sports. He was the founder of Volks Electric Railway, on Brighton seafront, designed the church hall, which was erected in 1907, and also invented a blower for the church organ, driven by water-power.

The band was established by the Reverend James Fanstone (1851-1937), the minister of the Congregational Church. During the late 1880's and early 1890's he had spent some time in Pernambuco, Brazil, where he carried out his missionary work with his wife, Elizabeth, née Baird (1863-1955). Two of his children, Brazillia and Albert, were born there. His elder son, James, played in the band, together with his nephew William Fanstone. It is not known if his other children – Ruth (1898-1991), Brazillia (1888-1947), Albert (1892-1985), and Bessie (1901-1990) - were band members. Ruth was certainly a musician, however.

William Shippam, the village blacksmith of Keymer for 22 years, and his four sons were members of the band around 1911. William, 19, was a licensed hawker of oils and colours; Harry, 17, a carpenter/joiner; George, 13, a blacksmith's mate; and Frederick, 11, was in school. For years the Shippam family had tried to obtain a smallholding in the area, but the various legal restrictions and conditions made it impossible for them to do so and also continue their trades. As a result, they emigrated to Canada in 1912, moving to Assiniboia, Saskatchewan.

The band quickly became an active part of village life, supporting the Church and community's activities at various events.

- Wednesday 15 July 1908 – performed at the church sale of work in Hassocks, conducted by William Fanstone.
- Monday 16 November 1908 – gave a concert at the Ote Hall Congregational Church, Wivelsfield.

Among the various solo and recital items, the band played “In This Hour of Softened Splendour” (Pinsuti), a hymn tune, march “The Lord’s Day” (Wright), selection “The Hymn of Praise” (Mendelssohn), euphonium solo “The Village Blacksmith” – soloist Mr Cottington, and march “Celestial Sounds” (Round).

Members of Hassocks Congregational Church

The band does not reappear until the late 1920's. Further research is required to determine the fate of the band after 1911. It is most probable that it did not survive WW1, but was re-established some 15 years later.

- At some point during the year prior to April 1927, the band gave a sacred concert for the Hassocks branch of the League of Nations Union.
- Sunday 30 September 1928 – the band, conducted by H.J. Lurway, provided musical selections at a meeting of the Burgess Hill Brotherhood at the Central Hall, Burgess Hill.

This is the last known appearance of the band.
